HISTORY

Prilep was founded on the ruins of the ancient city of Styberra, first a town in Macedon and later incorporated into the Roman Empire. Styberra, though razed by the Goths in 268, remained partly inhabited. The town was first mentioned as Prilep in 1014, as the place where the Tsar Samuil allegedly had a heart attack upon seeing thousands of his soldiers had been blinded by the Byzantines after the Battle of Kleidion. Byzantium lost it to the Second Bulgarian Empire, but later retook it. Prilep was acquired in 1334 by Marko, who de facto controlled only a territory in western Macedonia centered on Prilep. In 1395 it was incorporated into the Ottoman Empire, whose part it remained until 1913, when it entered into the Kingdom of Serbia after the Balkan wars when the allied Balkan countries divided the territory mostly inhabited by Macedonians among themselves. Prilep was part of Socialist Republic of Macedonia from 1918 to 1991, and since then of the Republic of Macedonia.

Monasteries
